

I was dismayed to hear that there is a proposal to lighten up on the restrictions of the Do Not Call list. Although I have been putting up with the allowed callers (people you have a business relationship with, political organizations, charities, etc.) it has been nice not receiving annoying "cold calls" from telemarketers mistakenly believing that I care to buy their products. These calls often came at inconvenient times (dinner, sometimes also as late as 9pm) and were a disruption to my household. To think that the FCC would start bowing to the pressure of telemarketing groups and loosening the restrictions is appalling. I urge you to back off and leave the law as is. As a U.S. citizen, I have the right to privacy in my home from intrusive telemarketers. Thank you.

James J. Makowski